

Master Site Plan

Located in outer Houston, this 250-acre Buddhist Retreat offers youth programs and segregated housing for practicing nuns and monks. The program for the Texas Buddhist Association's campus also offers a conservation area, administration areas, Bamboo Forest Lake, streams, meditation areas, camping activities, a memorial or "scattering" garden, organic farm, and main temple area. To allow accessibility for members to enjoy the 200-acre deeply wooded area a contract was signed with US Fish & Wildlife to provide clean up.

Keiji Asakura oversaw the landscape design for this self-sufficient campus and also consulted with the Center's planning and construction subcommittee in regards to fundraising issues.
